

Rotating Chore Chart for Roommates

Four roommates, four weeks — everyone owns every job exactly once a month. This page is a filled-in example; your blank chart is on page 2.

CHORE	WEEK 1	WEEK 2	WEEK 3	WEEK 4
Kitchen Wipe counters & stovetop, run or empty the dishwasher	Dana	Tal	Maya	Yoni
Bathroom Sink, toilet, shower, mirror — the whole room, not the easy half	Yoni	Dana	Tal	Maya
Floors Vacuum and mop the common areas	Maya	Yoni	Dana	Tal
Trash & recycling To the outdoor bins, fresh liner in — twice this week	Tal	Maya	Yoni	Dana

How the rotation works

- One step each week. Everyone shifts to the next chore down the list, so the grim job belongs to each of you exactly once a month.
- Week 5 starts the cycle again. No redrawing, no negotiating — the chart is the schedule.
- “Done” means the checklist under the chore, not the vibe. The next person inherits a known standard, not someone’s shortcuts.

Your Chart

Fill in the names, date the weeks, and tape it where everyone sees it. Two spare rows for whatever your flat fights about that we didn't list.

1. _____ 2. _____ 3. _____ 4. _____

CHORE	WEEK 1	WEEK 2	WEEK 3	WEEK 4
	OF _____	OF _____	OF _____	OF _____
Kitchen Wipe counters & stovetop, run or empty the dishwasher
Bathroom Sink, toilet, shower, mirror — the whole room
Floors Vacuum and mop the common areas
Trash & recycling To the outdoor bins, fresh liner in

Tip: start like the example — everyone takes one chore in week one, then the whole house shifts one chore forward each week. An app can run this rotation for you; the fridge door can't.
